FPE CALCULATOR

FPE or “Foot Pounds of Energy” refers to the amount of potential energy that could be transferred into the target when the projectile hits its mark. This is an effective measure of how an air gun will do in a hunting environment.

Multiply the weight of the pellet (in grains)

Times the square of the velocity

Divide that number by 450240.

$$\{ (\text{weight in grains}) \times (\text{fps}) \times (\text{fps}) \} \div 450240$$

WHY CHOOSE SLUGS?

SLUGS ARE AN IDEAL CHOICE FOR HUNTING AND LONG RANGE SHOOTING.

Slugs have a higher ballistic coefficient compared to pellets, meaning they overcome air resistance much easier and fight drag better. That higher BC also translates into more retained energy and velocity as a slug travels to the target, meaning it hits harder than a pellet. Because of this, it's vital you know what is beyond your target and take that into consideration before taking your shots. Also worth considering is slugs tend to be more expensive and may not shoot as accurately as pellets do across a wide variety of barrels.
