FIVE GIFTS FOR 2024

By Tom Gaylord

With the Christmas holiday season approaching soon you may be struggling with what gifts to get for your airgunner. Let me tell you about five great ones that span the range of price.

Starting at the bottom

Shooters always need pellets, but I'm guessing your shooter is quite specific about the ones he wants. This is such a personal thing that I will avoid it. But pellets often cost around $20 per tin these days, so how about something equivalent?

If your airgunner has guns he is proud of, he needs a way to preserve their finish. I'm going to give you a gift that does that, plus it's one you can put together. It starts with a can of Ballistol, and I recommend the 16-ounce non-aerosol can that sells for around $18. There are aerosol cans, but they contain less product. This is where you get clever as a gift-giver.

Find a small generic spray bottle that will hold just enough liquid to do the job. Amazon has a small one that holds one ounce of liquid and sells for around a dollar. Better yet, get a couple generic spray bottles so your airgunner can put one on his workbench and one in his range bag.

Voila! You are a hero because you understand. You can even put a small microfiber cloth with each small bottle and now your airgunner has everything he needs to protect his airguns.

Believe me—this is not something an airgunner will buy for himself. Every time he looks at Ballistol he thinks about the tin of pellets he can't buy. And the spray bottles? He has no clue.

He'll think you are a genius!

Step up with a Beeman P17

One step up from the Ballistol package is the Beeman P17 target pistol. Check to make sure your airgunner doesn't already have one, because these puppies are the absolute best deal in air pistols on the planet.

Beeman's P17 is the best air pistol deal on earth.

This pistol will cost $45 plus shipping, but you might find a deal that can save some money.

This is the sort of gift where other gifts can be added, either by the same person or by others who know what is being given. I recommend pellets and targets as those additional gifts. And I will be specific. A tin of RWS Hobby pellets goes well with this pistol. So does a package of 10-meter Air Pistol Bullseye targets.

Your shooter will need something to mount the targets to—something that will stop the pellets safely. A cubic cardboard box that measures 12 inches per side will work fine. Fill the box with rubber mulch purchased at the garden center. This "target trap" will cost under ten dollars to build.

Take the next step with a Daisy 499B

The Daisy 499B BB gun is also called the world's most accurate BB gun. There is no other BB gun that can match it for accuracy. A good shooter can place 10 BBs into a group the size of a baby aspirin at the international competition distance of 5 meters.

Daisy's 499B is the world's most accurate BB gun.

Don't let the $176 price tag discourage you. There is no other BB gun like this one. This one is the real deal and will outshoot any other BB gun on the planet. If your airgunner likes to shoot targets, this is the most appropriate airgun for him. It even outshoots many accurate pellet rifles at the international distance of 5 meters.

While it will shoot conventional BBs, it will be two or three times more accurate with Daisy Match Grade Precision Ground Shot. A box of them sells for well under ten dollars, so they can make great stocking stuffers.

This is another gift that uses special targets. For this one you need a 5-meter BB gun target that has a bullseye the size of a U.S. nickel coin.

Going higher to the Weihrauch HW50S

The next gift I'll recommend costs serious money, but I can recommend it because nearly every airgunner wants one. Your job is to find out whether your airgunner already has one. I'm talking about the Weihrauch HW50S breakbarrel rifle. Costing $450, this rifle is a serious investment, but it is so well made that it will still be working generations from now. Super-powered air rifles sold at discount store are priced cheaper but that's because they are—cheaper!

Top of the line - TX200 Mark III

I will not recommend a precharged pneumatic (PCP) air rifle unless the shooter specifically knows which one he wants. It would be like ordering a bridal gown to surprise the bride with the day before her wedding!

My recommendation for this top of the line gift is the Air Arms TX200 Mark III rifle. If your airgunner wants a TX200 you probably already know about it. Those are my recommendations for your consideration this coming holiday season.

CONSIDERING AN AVENGE-X

By Tom Gaylord

The Avenge-X is available in this conventional wood-stocked model, or in a tactical version, or as a bullpup. There is even a synthetic stock for hunters who carry their rifle in harsh weather.

The Avenge-X is significant

The Avenge-X by Air Venturi is the most significant new precharged pneumatic (PCP) air rifle since the Benjamin Discovery. The Avenge-X is not just an air rifle — it's a complete system of air rifles in all three principal smallbore calibers—.177, .22 and .25. With this rifle you get features that used to cost over one-thousand dollars—if they were even available. Those features include:

- An externally adjustable regulator
- Separate gauges for the reservoir and regulator
- Adjustable power
- A huge shot count
- A sidelever that the owner can switch from right to left
- Fully adjustable trigger
- Anchors for quick detachable sling swivels
- Single-shot tray, standard magazine and high-capacity magazine

Change calibers in minutes

In addition to all this, the owner can change calibers in five minutes with parts that cost just $70. That price includes a barrel! What that means to you is for $70 above the purchase price of the rifle you can have a second caliber, and for another $70 you can have all three. That's three different air rifles for the price of one.

Wide range of models

The Avenge-X comes in models that range from a conventional model with a wood stock to a bullpup to a tactical model. You pick the one you like and some of them come with additional features like removeable air tanks and adjustable stocks. The real story of the Avenge-X is the accuracy. It shoots as well as rifles costing three times as much, and often exceeds them. The rifle is accurate right out of the box and it also allows tuning that takes it to a razor's edge. You can tune your rifle for a specific pellet and get many more shots than similar PCPs offer.

The shot count is one of the Avenge-X's best features. Tyler Patner told me to expect 70 powerful shots on one fill of air. I actually got 84 in one test. That's a lot!

Good PCP point of entry

An Avenge-X is a good way to come into the world of PCPs. The rifle is well supported and has a host of accessories—both from the factory and also aftermarket—that you can grow in PCPs as your rifle grows with you. If you are considering coming into the PCP world, think about this as your starter.

TO READ
 FULL ARTICLE

Today's archers have a wide array of options for customizing their arrows, from shaft materials to various components that enhance both performance and aesthetics. The process of arrow assembly involves careful selection and precise installation of several key elements.

The main components of a custom arrow include the shaft, fletching, nocks, and inserts, with wraps being an optional addition for visual appeal. Archers must consider factors such as shaft thickness, flexibility, and intended use when selecting materials.

FLETCHING CHOICES range from plastic vanes to feathers, with various sizes, shapes, and colors available from manufacturers like Bohning, AAE, and NAP.

WRAPS, while not performance-enhancing, can improve arrow visibility and aesthetics.

NOCK SELECTION is crucial for proper energy transfer and string fit. Options include standard nocks in various colors and lighted nocks for improved visibility during flight and retrieval.

ESSENTIAL TOOLS for arrow assembly include an arrow saw and a fletching jig. The assembly process involves cutting shafts to length, cleaning them thoroughly, and installing inserts with appropriate adhesives. Wraps and fletching are then carefully applied using compatible glues.

PRECISION IS KEY throughout the assembly process, from aligning wraps to positioning fletching. Proper cleaning of shafts and allowing sufficient drying time for adhesives are crucial steps. Finally, nocks and field tips or broadheads are installed to complete the arrow.

This customization process allows archers to create arrows tailored to their specific needs and preferences, optimizing both performance and personal style. Read the full article for more details.
